Specific Programming

- Manhood to Fatherhood is a bi-weekly program taught by volunteers from Project Rebound, Inc. and It Takes a Village. The objective is to teach the participants how to define themselves as men, as fathers, and as positive role models within their homes and communities. Helping participants define themselves and their roles within their family unit will aid in the improvement of family relationships. The goal is to reconnect participants to their families as it is vital to their successful transition from prison back into their communities.
- confronting Self is a series of 12 questions that help the participants look at their life and discover why they chose certain actions. In addition, participants look at their family and uncover patterns that may have led them to incarceration. Within the program, participants learn to take responsibility for their actions and discover how to make wise choices. The class helps participants build character, improve relationships with family and develop their faith-based beliefs.
- Freedom Fighters is a comprehensive twotiered class to improve an inmates mental and physical wellbeing. Participants will learn basic coping skills and methods to help them improve their knowledge of nutrition and exercise. Teachers will also demonstrate how participants can improve their mood through techniques targeted to their mind, body, and spirit.
